FRIDAY, MAY 20, 1870.

THE EVENING TELEGRAPH, from its original establishment, has been in the receipt of telegraphic news from the New York Associated Press, which consists of the Tribune, Times, Herald, World, Sun, Journal of Commerce, Evening Post, Commercial Advertiser, and Evening Express. The success which has attended our enterprise is, in itself, a sufficient evidence of the freshness, fullness, and reliability of the news which we have received from this source. We have now entered into a special contract by which THE EVENING TELEGRAPH has the exclusive use of the news furnished in the afternoon by the Associated Press to its own members, the North American, Inquirer, Ledger, Press, Age and German Democrat, of this city, and the leading journals of the East, North, West and South; and hereafter THE TELEGRAPH will be the only evening paper published in this city in which the afternoon despatches of the Associated Press will appear.

RELIGION AND POLITICS.

An animated and exciting debate sprung up in Congress yesterday on a motion to make an appropriation for the support of a Minister Resident in Rome. This motion was favored by a large majority of the Democratic members on various grounds, and it was also advocated by Mr. Banks (Rep.) in a brief speech, declaring that "the omission of Rome would be considered by a portion of the American people as intentional, and he did not wish that, besides, one of the great religious convulsions of the world was approaching, and the United States should have at least a representative there to furnish accurate reports of the great events transpiring there." The appropriation was opposed and defeated, however, by the mass of the Republican members, and the deep feeling evinced during the debate makes it not improbable that the threatened religious convulsion may affect the politics of this country. Mr. Bingham (Rep.) sounded a key-note which may be heard this fall on the stump as well as in Protestant pulpits, when he bitterly denounced the Papal syllabus. He declared that "it is an attempt to fetter the freedom of the press. It is an attempt to strike down the rising antagonism against every despotism on the face of the earth, in the form of representative governments, foremost among which is America, the child and the hope of the earth's old age;" and he predicted the destruction of the Papal power by "the consuming breath of the enlightened public opinion of the civilized world, which declares for free governments, free churches, free schools, free Bibles, and free men." It is a long time since speeches of this character were made in Congress, and we do not wonder that a deep sensation was excited by the indications afforded of the creation of new issues in politics. The Democrats were not slow to take up the gauntlet. The story of the witches burnt in Massachusetts was duly rehearsed, and sundry references were made to Know-Nothingism, which, however, lost much of their point by the necessity of an explanation and denial on the part of Mr. Brooks, now a prominent Democratic member, of a charge made by John Covode that when he (Covode) was taking lessons in Know-Nothingism, Brooks was "the man who edited the paper to light them on their way" and to act as their "great head centre." The debate finally became extremely personal, and it required the most vigorous efforts of the Speaker to restore order. Although of comparatively small importance in itself, it affords a significant indication of the drift of public sentiment, and of the tendency of the times to seek political expression, in some form, of the deep religious and politico-religious emotions which are gradually being aroused. These feelings will be greatly intensified if any serious effort is made to carry into practice, in this country, the doctrines enunciated in the Papal syllabus, which strike at the root of our whole system of government. The proposed meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in the United States, which will probably give increased emphasis and unity to Protestantism, may also have a tendency to increase public interest in the issues suggested by Mr. Bingham's speech. Meanwhile the proceedings of the Presbyterian Assembly and the Episcopal Convention new in session in Philadelphia, although they have been confined to matters of immediate practical importance to the congregations and dioceses they represent, and although they have carefully avoided the introduction of any description of partisan issues, indicate that these two important branches of Protestantism are in full accord with the progressive spirit of the age, and prepared to offer a spirited resistance to any ecclesiastical attempt to destroy the public-school system or to undermine the civil and religious liberties of the nation. The freedom of religious faith and modes of worship which is guaranteed by the Constitution and public opinion should secure the rights of all sects and all creeds, but if invidious attempts are to be made, directly or indirectly, to limit this freedom, it can scarcely be expected that any of the Churches threatened will remain indifferent or idle spectators to such a movement.

THE MAYOR'S VETO.

MAYOR FOX yesterday vetoed the resolution of Councils inviting the New York 7th Regiment to visit the city of Philadelphia. The reasons given for this veto are so excellent that they will commend themselves without argument to the good sense of our citizens, and they should have been accepted as conclusive by both branches of Councils. Select Council, indeed, did sustain the Mayor unanimously, but, strange to say, Common Council passed the resolution over the veto by a vote of 35 to 10. The Mayor objected, in the first place, to a tender of the hospitalities of the city of Philadelphia without the appointment of any committee of the city authorities to make suitable provision for the comfort and entertainment of the regiment and without any appropriation having been made to meet the necessary expenses. His principal objection, however, was that such an entertainment as was proposed should be at private cost and not at the expense of the municipality. The Mayor is clearly and emphatically right in this, and he is correct in doubting the propriety of such a precedent. If the 7th Regiment should be invited here and entertained at the expense of the city, there would be in the future perpetual demands for the extension of like courtesies to other military associations, fire companies, and all manner of organizations, at an annual expense to the taxpayers of many thousands of dollars. The Mayor intimates that extraordinary circumstances may arise when it would be perfectly proper for the city to make a tender of its hospitalities to a prominent and popular military organization like the 7th Regiment, but there is no occasion whatever at the present time for us to keep open house, and, in refusing to approve of this project, the Mayor manifestly performed his duty, and is entitled to the thanks of the already over-burdened taxpayers.

THE PAVING QUESTION.

In Councils yesterday the question of paving the streets was discussed in various of its phases, and considerable time was spent in arguing upon the relative merits of gravel and ashes, and the proper size of cobblestones. This shows that however advanced our civilization may be in some points, we are still in a state of barbarism in others, and no better evidence of a condition approaching to savagery can be produced than the fact that a renewal of cobblestone pavements should be gravely considered in our municipal legislature. If Councils would earnestly and honestly endeavor to find out what is the best and most durable pavement, without regard to the schemes of jobbers and speculators, and then pass an ordinance forbidding the laying of any cobblestones on the public highways, and requiring a good pavement to be put down whenever the streets need repairing, they will do a service for which the citizens of Philadelphia cannot be too deeply grateful. A suitable pavement that would represent in some degree the refinement of a civilized state of society might perhaps cost more at first than the cobblestones, but more than the difference would be saved in wear and tear and in the safety and comfort of all the bipeds and quadrupeds that are obliged to submit to the torture of the present abominations. We hope that the members of Council will think it worth while to give this subject consideration at an early day, and endeavor to make the streets of Philadelphia not altogether disgraceful to a great and wealthy community.

THE CROWN OF SPAIN.

The poor Spaniards are still in trouble about their crown, which none of the regular professional princes of Europe, who are always waiting for any such vacancies as may turn up, seem to be very solicitous about assuming. The Duke de Montpensier now seems to be almost the only candidate with royal blood in his veins, and he belongs to a family that has been out of business for a good many years, for the reason that its principal representatives are not up to the latest improvements in the art of kingship. Montpensier's chances, however, are apparently not very brilliant just at the present time, and the public attention appears to be principally concentrated upon Serrano and Espartero, who are good Spaniards, although they do not boast of royal connections. The cable despatches from Madrid state that the news is important but conflicting. It would be something wonderful if it were anything else than conflicting, for ever since the consummation of the revolution our information about the prospects for a definite settlement of the affairs of the Government has been but little else than vague rumors, and the latest intelligence is probably entitled to about as much credence as most that has preceded it. One report states that the Council of Ministers have determined to confer upon the Regent Serrano the royal attributes, if no candidate for the throne can be found within a reasonably short time, and another informs us that the crown will be forced upon the veteran Espartero, whether he will or not, in default of any other solution of the question. Another rumor is that Montpensier has returned to Madrid, and that his eldest son had a long conference with the Regent Serrano, which may indicate that Montpensier is bent upon urging his claims. After all, it would not be a matter for surprise if Serrano were to accept the crown, and if it were to be discovered that he has been intriguing and managing for this consummation from the first. Hitherto Serrano has openly played the part of a pure and disinterested patriot, but the crown of Spain, although it has been declined by so many princes of the blood royal, is still a prize to tempt ambition, and Serrano's position as Regent has given him a taste of power which may have made him the more anxious to possess the glittering bauble that is now going begging. Taking the Regent's past course as an indication of what he will do in the future, the Spaniards might indeed go further and fare worse, but liberal candidates for thrones too often make the most illiberal rulers after they have once obtained the object of their ambition, and in case Serrano is proclaimed King of Spain we can only hope that he will be one of the exceptions to what is almost a general rule.
